

]project-open[releases Version 3.0 of its Open-Source Software]project-consulting[

The software is designed for small and medium businesses and now runs with a free database on Windows and Linux.

Barcelona, September 29th, 2005:]project-open[, a provider of open-source based project management software, announces the release of Version 3.0 of]project-consulting[. The new version runs with the free PostgreSQL database on both Linux and Windows, allowing SMEs to take advantage of Internet technology with no license cost.

"The open-source based]project-consulting[project management solution has been designed for the specific needs of small and medium companies. "Working with]project-consulting[allows you to perform your projects more cost-efficiently, which leads to competitive advantages." says Frank Bergmann, Managing Director of]project-open[.

"The open-source idea is just beginning to gain momentum in the market for project management software and will ultimately revolutionize the market; we want to give our customers the chance to take advantage of these developments as soon as possible."

]project-consulting[is an open-source based web project management and PSA (Professional Services Automation) solutions package for small and medium consulting companies focused on the efficient management of internal resources, knowledge management and Internet collaboration.

With]project-consulting[, any authorized user can access the system anytime and from anywhere, evaluating all relevant project information. The integrated financial controlling module allows users to check profits and losses for projects and customers.

The]project-consulting[architecture is based on Internet technology and is designed for mission-critical applications with high scalability and a sophisticated role-based permissions system.
